Philip Buettner completes G-RAP training

FORT LARAMIE – Philip Buettner, of Fort Laramie, recently completed the Guard Recruiter Assistant Program, G-RAP, for the Wyoming Army National Guard.

The G-RAP program provides the opportunity for traditional civilian-soldiers to be hired by a civilian contractor as a recruiter assistant and earn $2,000 per new Soldier.

In order to become a recruiter assistant, Buettner, successfully completed the required online training that covers ethics, National Guard and Army values, and the duties and responsibilities of a recruiter assistant.

Buettner will act as a dependable and constant liaison with new Soldiers during the time until the Soldier reports for their initial entry training. Buettner will also act as a liaison for individuals with prior service experience during the time they are integrated and acclimated to their new Wyoming Army National Guard unit.

“G-RAP is centered on a ‘strength from within tradition’ that has grass roots in Wyoming’s communities and the Wyoming Army National Guard. G-RAP focuses on the individual strengths and values of our Army National Guard Soldiers and their abilities to recruit among their peers and spheres of influence,” said Maj. Fred Fichtner, Wyoming Army National Guard officer strength manager.
